Crime In Athens County.

The grand jury for the present term of the Athens county court of common pleas is a record breaker. The court docket is the longest in the memory of the oldest county officials, and the grand jury required one whole week to complete its work. In that time it examined over five hundred witnessess and had under consideration about seventy cases. Out of these seventy cases it found that over two-thirds of them were the result of orimes which the court would have to pass upon.

Most of the cases before the grand jury comes from the towns where the most drinking is done, and the county jail is filled with men who, had it not been for their addiction to drink, would now be about their uncommon occurrence. INGALLS AND SHERMAN. low the Kansas Seastor Walted Po

In the course of his memoirs of departed statesmen Senator Vest tells of sharp passage between Senator John J. Ingalis and Senator John Sherman. Ingalls had reported from the pendons committee a bill granting a pension to all who had served thirty days in the Federal army. He stated that the bill had been unauimously indorsed the Republican national convention He moved an immediate consideration and resumed his sent. "The Democratle senators felt much delicacy in opposing any pensions proposed by the Republicans," says Senator Vest, "and they knew that any opposition on their part would be quoted as evidence of their hostility to Union soldiers. There was profound silence for a moment, the chair, stating that the time had not yet come for service pensions to the soldiers of the last war. He stated that no convention, national or state, had the right to instruct him as to his senatorial duty, and he objected to the present consideration of the bill. The measure went to the calendar and died there, while the crowd of pension attorneys who had originated the scheme formed a sad procession as they filed out of the galleries, uttering flerce anathemas against the Ohlo senator."

Senator Vest declares that Ingalis, "who never forgot nor forgave, nursed his wrath and two years afterward had his revenge when Sherman appeared before the District of Columbia committee, of which Ingalls was chairman and advocated an appropriation bill providing for the extension of Four-teenth street to Columbia heights, where Sherman was a large owner of real estate. Senator Sherman in urgng the bill said that Washington ld be made the most beautiful capital in the world and should have streets, parks and public buildings equal to those of Rome when she was mistress of the world. Ingalis dryly remarked that he had no objection to mproving Washington city so as to make it the superior of Rome in every espect, but that he had never heard of Roman senator asking for an extenion of the Appian Way at public expense in order to increase the value of his suburban property."

But after this telling shot the Kansas senator voted for the measure. Kansas City Journal.
